

Wearing down the stone

August 31, 2006

Joel Akin

Why is it that we are like dust? Why is it that we fight the fight of faith and still that mountain in our way tries to wear us down with its weight? After all which is bigger. The mountain or the grain of mustard seed faith? Sometimes it seems the faith is bigger than the mountain and its weight is heavier than the mountain.

Faith is like a grain of mustard seed. It becomes part of the "bush like a tree" and its weight isn't meant to be heavy. But the war that we are in spiritually wears us down and we are rounded and surrounded on every side. So how do I win? How do I win when I come from generations of prayer warriors? How do I win when Satan has beat me with a bat? Do I take the bat and play the same game as him or do I run towards the father and seek solace?

The only problem these days is that I am fighting to return to the presence of the Lord because this battle is against the evil one. If you don't pray then you'd better start. Prayer is that part of this story that only a few understand. I guess some might see it as being called to war. Most of us campaign against wars and so if I tell you that there is a spiritual battle taking place you'd say "Lets organize a protest?" It might sound foolish but that might be your right. Only problem is the enemy doesn't care if you protest some or much. He wants you overcome and he'll take you to the bank for everything you own. And that is why you are destined to lose. That is unless you have Jesus as your Lord and savior and put God first.

Now this battle is a big one. Its a war against the biggest players in the field. Now why is it happening? Its going on because God wants men to overcome. he wants them to fight evil and overcome the power of sin. And none of us wants to fight Sin for it carries a harsh sting and that sting is death.

So do you fight against death? I don't want to. God told me once that if I fight against death I win by special dispensation. So why then do I feel as if I'm surrounded on every side? Because it is a battle that tries to come against me on every side. And its a battle that throws me into the corner and spits on me. Its a battle of the heart and that is hard to see right now. Probably like trying to understand a foreign language. You see the person and they try to explain it but not always too credibly. And if your understanding is off in some area, as it probably is, then you need help.

Now I am ticked off with evil to the extent I keep fighting. But I know God wants me to have rest. So how then do I stop? Not easily. I fight by choice and the extra is meant to be there. But evil thwarts and Satan starts off with his curses. But trust me in this by Gods grace I will not submit and I will not give up. I will continue to fight until that breakthrough hits even if it hits the earth with the force of a mountain. I'm tired of Satan's lies and I'm tired of a story where he gets out the glory.

If you don't want God in your life then get out of my way. I'm praying and I am praying big enough to get Gods attention. I believe that. And I believe God has heard my prayer. So listen, He is coming and He is coming back to deal with evil in any way He can. So give up now while you can cause this Battle Belongs to the Lord.