

Lies vs Truth

Revelation 21:8 But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death.

Some days are like that. You wake up and find you are still tired. You get out of bed like a worm out of an apple and find yourself crawling upstairs where a box of breakfast cereal awaits. Pouring yourself a bowl you fill it with milk, grab a spoon and the morning paper and turn on the light as its still too dark to see.

You finish in minutes, there's is no interesting ads, you find yourself cleaning up briefly, greeting your father who sits at the morning table reading the Bible, papers scattered about him, still in his robe and pj's. You head downstairs and grab some iced tea and then you turn on the computer. Its difficult because you want the word of the Lord but it seems like your still fighting with the devil and some of his hordes as they strive to prevent you from reaching your prayer time with God.

Its been a battle like this for more than a year now. Each day I seek God out in prayer. I wait because he tells me to trust. And trusting is like waiting. It is a test of stamina and strength because I find at present I am so weak. Like scripture says if I wait upon the Lord He will renew my strength. This is that time in my life. A time of waiting for that renewal.

There is in me something that knows the truth. Something that seeks it out from the depths of my heart. Something that crushes Bee Lies and Be Liars. I see them buzzing around seeking entry with thoughts but I have learned to turn my head towards the Lord. For I know that lies come in all forms. From the mind which speaks of negative things to the circumstances which seems impossible to get out of. This outrageous battle cries across the ages of time speaking for justice and freedom.

I have wondered if its possible for me to justify myself. Last night I prayed and wondered if I could bring justice on Satan. But God showed me that if I judge without knowing all facts I do become like a clanging symbol. And then I wonder if I have judged without merit or understanding. We as humans are quick to judge and quick to hold counsel against another if they sin. We want to know the truth but does the truth always set us free? Do we sometimes take that sin we have and let it loose upon the world with our judgments based on misconceptions? How can we tell someone we know all the facts when there are some things we don't know.

At a point like that we may become liars. Chosen to condemn not because God said to but because our eyes tell us and our circumstances tell us and all things tell us. Its happened to me more than once as men and women have judged me guilty even before I knew if something was of God or not. In my personal opinion it always was God who lead me true and people who tried to block me from moving.

Growing up I don't remember deliberately lying much. I had been taught lying was wrong and so when I did find a lie slip out it left me sick to my stomach. I hated lies and lying was like kicking a sleeping dog. There is a saying to let sleeping dogs lie. So if someone has to lie let it be the dog. For sleeping dogs are like lying spirits. They seek out a mouth to practice their lies. As long as we keep our mouth shut and chose to tell just the facts we need not fear what that future may show.

Stay well and be well and live like today is your last day.
